ABSTRACT - Acarology would not exist without a cadre of ardent practitioners, who have often overcome great obstacles to nurture our beloved science. Today, acarology benefits not only from the contributions of full-time professionals, who are few in number, but from the frequently overlooked exertions of many retired and part-time enthusiasts. Among those we should recognize and remember for their selfless service is Donald De Leon, a quiet but persistent soul whose entire acarological oeuvre was crafted in retirement.

Key words - Donald De Leon, Biography, Bibliography.
